It is the only one of its kind - A civilian Roman city in the occupied Germania.
 A historic site, established around the turn of the first millennium where Romans and Germans lived and traded peacefully some 2000 years ago. A visible symbol of the extent of that emerging city was its 'forum' - a central administration building. This building was surrounded by a great number of residential buildings and workshops. A rampart protected the area.
 Excavations show building fragments. The discovery of numerous pieces of jewellery and utensils are interpreted to be evidential of peaceful relationships between the ethnicities of that era and their far reaching trade relations.
 The Varus Battle in 9AD during which the Romans were defeated sealed the faith and history of this ancient roman site and brought historical changes to the whole of Europe as the Roman troops had to retreat and re-define their borders at the banks of the River Rhine. The city they left behind was left to its fate.
 On the anniversary of this prominent date,.. Roman, Celtic and German life shall return to Waldgirmes.
